Preserving Military History:

THE SOLDIERS LOT WHERE THE ENTIRE
MEMORIAL SERVICES WILL BE HELD

Last week, we learned that the goal of a preservationist is to preserve 'cultural property'—irreplaceable objects, structures, or collections that are significant for a variety of reasons. Preserving historic cemeteries like Woodland ensures that important stories aren't lost to time and remain accessible to the public.

Woodland is the final resting place of veterans from every major conflict that the United States has ever been involved in*. Preserving their grave markers and other memorials to their service is a responsibility we take seriously. By ensuring that cemetery records are complete and correct, and protecting grave markers or other memorials from loss or damage, we honor the service and sacrifice of veterans in our care.

Wait, didn't the Revolutionary War end in 1783?

For those of you wondering how a cemetery founded in 1841 had anything to do with burying soldiers of a war that had ended nearly sixty years before;

1. Many veterans of the Revolutionary War were relatively young when the war ended and went on to live (occasionally) long lives.
2. One reason Woodland was created was due to Dayton's rapid expansion, which put a squeeze on the city's earlier cemeteries; leading many families to choose to reinter (re-bury) their loved ones at Woodland.

Woodland's Civil War Lot:

To understand Woodland's Civil War Lot, you have to know a little bit about the Grand Army of the Republic.

The Grand Army of the Republic (or G.A.R., for short) was established in 1866 for honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Union armed forces. Like many veterans' organizations today, the G.A.R. was politically active—founding soldier's homes and working to legislate pensions, for example. They also made sure that veterans of the Civil War were afforded a proper burial (their experiences during wartime had left them with some concern on this point), and that their gravesites were appropriately tended and honored.

Shortly after the end of the Civil War, Woodland's Trustees passed a Resolution whereby they donated what was, at the time, known as section 108, lot 3, to the Grand Army of the Republic for the burial of soldiers who had died in combat.

In 1901, 'Old Guard Post No. 23' (Dayton's chapter of the G.A.R.) erected two cannons "in honor of [our] fallen comrades". There is reason to believe these cannons were taken from confederate positions at Charleston Harbor, but details of their journey to Woodland are not fully known.

Cast iron is (obviously) iron-based, cast; meaning formed in a mold (allowing for greater detail than earlier metal-casting techniques), then bolted together.

To give Woodland's Civil War cannons a bit of a sprucing up, Manager of Preservation Misti Spillman started with just plain water.

Using a soft brush and rags, she gently removed dirt and lichen buildup. Next, Misti carefully used a plastic scraper to remove buildup of corrosion and loose particles on the cannon. Everything was left to dry thoroughly before a new coat of white paint was applied to the lettering.

Once everything was cleaned and dry, Misti applied Owatrol Marine Oil. The oil helps to prevent cast iron from corroding by soaking into the surface, then blocking exposure to the atmosphere—which protects the cannon from further corrosion.

Next Week:

Woodland's Manager of Preservation & Community Outreach is Misti Spillman.

Officially joining the team in March of 2023, she began volunteering as a tour guide in 2011, then began conducting preservation workshops in 2018.

Misti earned her master's degree at Wright State University, writing her thesis on the importance of cemeteries in local history. As the owner of Reviving Cemeteries, LLC, Misti has had plenty of experience preserving, cleaning, and repairing cemetery materials.

Stay tuned for next week's Woodland Minute, where we will explore what causes damage to cemeteries, and how that damage can be prevented or repaired!
