

HISTORIC CEMETERY & ARBORETUM

Jeraldyne Blunden

In 1948, Jeraldyne Blunden's mother was raising two daughters who were itching to dance.

"Back in those days it was hard," said Jeraldyne's sister, Carol Ann. "The only dance studios were white. And everybody [the studios] said the typical: 'There's no room, our classes are closed."

Undeterred, a group of Dayton mothers went to see the Schwarz sisters. Founders of the second oldest ballet company in the United States, the sisters had operated a studio in Dayton for several decades.

"Miss Jo [Schwarz] told them, 'We'd love to teach your children. But I'm sorry to say they can't come to our school. If they do, we'll lose business. We can't afford to lose business. You find the place, and we'll come there."

The Schwarz sisters saw that Jeraldyne had the talent and dedication to become a professional dancer. They encouraged the young Jeraldyne and helped to secure scholarships for her to attend summer programs hosted by the American Dance Festival in Connecticut. Jeraldyne's experiences outside of Dayton helped to shape her vision and dreams for the future.

While still a high school student, the Schwarz sisters asked Jeraldyne to assume the role of director of the Linden Center dance classes. With Jeraldyne at the helm, the student population grew too large for the Linden Center space, so the classes relocated to the basement of St. Margaret's church.

In 1968, Jeraldyne Blunden founded the Dayton Contemporary Dance Company (DCDC), so that her students would have more opportunities to perform. Although Jeraldyne knew the obstacles of being a second dance company in a city as small as Dayton, she tenaciously pursued her dream.

"She planted her feet here, the roots here, and she saw no reason why a company of this caliber could not exist in [Dayton]," Debbie Blunden-Diggs, Jeraldyne's daughter says.

Jeraldyne Blunden died on November 22, 1999 at the age of 58. Jennifer Dunning from the New York Times described Blunden's legacy as a beloved leader in the dance world, stating, "That nononsense approach to life was mixed with steely determination, a great personal warmth and humor and an unsentimental humanity that made her a much-loved figure on the national dance scene."

Her legacy is still carried on today by her daughter Debbie Blunden-Diggs and granddaughters Alexis and Lyndsey Diggs.

Dr. Pilar de la Aguilera (3/17/1917 - 8/29/2021)

1942 was a busy year for Dr. Pilar de la Aguilera. She married Tomas de la Aguilera and earned PhD's in both physics and chemistry from the University of Habana. While working as a physics professor and raising her family, Dr. de la Aguilera continued her education in pharmacology—using her PhD in that subject to open a drugstore with her husband.

In 1961, Dr. de la Aguilera escaped Cuba. During that troubled time, she served as a houseparent to dozens of unaccompanied minors, many of whom kept in contact with Dr. de la Aguilera for the next 60 years.

An expert Sudoku enthusiast, Pilar traveled extensively. Here in Ohio, Dr. de la Aguilera became a professor of chemistry at Wilberforce University. In 22 years she never missed a single day of work. Over the course of her career, Dr. de la Aguilera spent nearly 40 years as a professor of science and was a life member of the American Association of University Women.

Described as an astute pragmatist with a generous heart, strict discipline and strong work ethics, Pilar de la Aguilera died in 2021 at the age of 104.

Symbols of the Season

Palm Fronds

Awarded to winning athletes by the ancient Greeks, the palm frond became so culturally representative of triumph that it was used to identify Victoria or Nike; the Roman goddess of victory.

Later on, Christians adapted the palm to symbolize a martyr's triumph over death—and by extension, any believer's triumph over death.

Because a victory means that a conflict or competition is at an end, the palm frond also became a symbol of peace. In Islamic tradition, the palm is a symbol of peace often associated with paradise.

Upcoming Events!

End of Winter Bird Walk:

This is a great time see year-round residents, winter visitors, and possibly some early spring migrants like the Eastern Phoebe and Ruby-crowned Kinglet.

Bring your binoculars and dress for the weather. The walk is slow-paced, and mostly stays on the road surface, but sometimes does venture "off-trail" into the grass.

Please dress appropriately for the weather and wear a good pair of walking shoes! The tour will meet at the Eichelberger Plaza at the main gates of the cemetery.

Your nature guide will be Amanda Lawson, an Ohio Certified Volunteer Naturalist.
